Science Fiction: The Earth-Moon Rescue Series

The first of two books in a series about 23rd century environmental activist Rick Stein who travels back to the 21st century to stop the climate apathy that is killing the Earth. His partner, the fearless and violent young woman Chen Shu, leaves a trail of murder in her quest to find the man in 2055 whose decisions are to blame for the Earth's slow demise. Rick's 21st century host, Jill Strawbridge, takes more than a casual interest in the visitor from the future and the two develop a bond that is put to the test.

The second in the two-book series finds Rick and his wife living on the Moon in the giant domed habitat built by the trillionaire Austin Revere. Hiding out after his murderous exploits on Earth 11 years earlier, Rick is discovered by cop Jenna McNamara, who reluctantly recruits him to root out a killer, find the local drug baron and figure out the cause of a plague that is spreading fast throughout the dome. The lunar escape of last resort for people fleeing the Earth's slow climate death is now a toxic habitat itself.

Contemporary Fiction: The Bud & Maggie Series

Book 1 of 3: Bud Remmick supports his newsroom employees to a fault. When he finds out one is being sexually blackmailed, his sublimated rage erupts with deadly results. He pleads guilty to manslaughter for killing his news director boss and proceeds to rationalize his behavior while behind bars. But when he's attacked in prison, his lawyer deserts him and his wife wants a divorce, the tidy rules of Budland start to fall apart.

Book 2 of 3: Bud Remmick does four years for manslaughter and returns to his old career in TV news. He reconciles with wife Maggie whose career in government has taken off. But Bud discovers a murderer is committing crimes and selling video of them to his station. Maggie's career is targeted by the corrupt governor of Pennsylvania who thinks Bud should never have been released from jail. The two stories converge with a heart-stopping twist.

Non-fiction: Liveshot: Journalistic Heroism in Philadelphia

The true story of TV journalists coverage of the 1985 MOVE disaster in Philadelphia

A first-person account of WCAU-TV's award winning coverage of the worst day in Philadelphia's modern history. The plan to evict the anti-government group called MOVE on May 13, 1985, went off the rails, resulting in 11 people including 5 children dead, an entire city block burned to the ground and the mayor and his leaders in the field trying to explain. Unfortunately, there was no good explanation. The story continues to raise questions about government over-reach and unchecked police power.

Podcast

— P O D C A S T —

A podcast about creativity and creative people, Type. Tune. Tint. features authors, musicians and artists whose talents blossomed despite the limits of their day to day lives, preconceived notions of who they are or layers of their own denial, to wit: a singer who discovered she could really sing at a karaoke night; an artist who discovered her talent after years as a TV newscaster; high school science students who became advisors for a science fiction novel. Listen to Type. Tune. Tint. on all major podcast venues.
